Some people incorrectly teach that an R "always" controls the vowel.

This is NOT TRUE! There ARE exceptions.

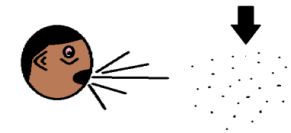

One of those exceptions is when the vowel is the first syllable in a word, like "arrange." The "a" makes the schwa sound "uh" and the emphasis is placed on that syllable. The r's that follow it have the usual r sound.

What is meant by an R Controlled Digraph or Trigraph?

When the letter R follows a vowel or vowels it affects the sounds that are made. It can do this when only 1 vowel comes before the R making a digraph (2 letters seen and 1 sound heard) or when 2 vowels come before the R making a trigraph (3 letters seen and 1 sound heard). Remember, in these cases these sounds occur when an "r" is present.

AR as in Dollar = the same "er" sound found in "Germs."

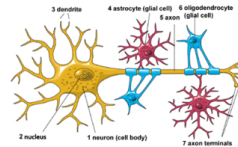

ER "er" as in "Germs."

were

"The clouds were bright."

The Trigraph ERE as in "were" the same sound as "er." The last "e" is silent.
